Dr Ian Fenwick and Rtn Dean Outerson Death in the Time of Digital

Dr Ian Fenwick and Rtn Dean started their amusing and thought-provoking talk with some statistics that reflect our times.

In the three minutes it took for their introduction, 600M+ emails and 300K+ tweets were sent, 10,000+ pictures were uploaded and 6M+ searches were made.

In short, they argued, digital media dominates our lives and that in this same three minutes, at least five Facebook users had died which led into their talk... death in the time of digital.

Concerns about death have changed over the ages with the question today being, after you die, who gets your digital assets? That is, all your emails, contacts, Facebook accounts, your pictures, your bookmarks and your search and browsing history?

Who, they asked, gets to use your internet accounts once you have moved on to that better place. Citing an example of a father of a war hero who wanted to use his son's email to create a memorial but was not allowed access, to Social Media Zombies, people who have died in real life, but live on in Facebook and Linked-in, Ian and Dean moved into current problems faced by anyone with digital accounts.

Many might, they suggested, consider simply leaving username and password with someone and while this will allow that person to access everything, strictly speaking it's impersonation and contravenes many internet provider policies.

How then, they asked rhetorically, can we cheat 'The Digital Assets Dilemma'; how can we pass on after our death, what has been so carefully concealed in life?

Their answer, be prepared: clean out digital assets while you can, use different passwords for different classes of assets, make sure credentials are stored physically and clearly marked and finally, consider a digital executor, that is, a place on-line to store your data that will allow your digital executor to access and deal with your post-death, on-line presence.

Among their various suggestions, were: <http://legacylocker.com/>, <http://www.deathswitch.com/>, <http://ifidie.net/> for your chance at the very last word and <http://www.deadsoci.al/> a perfect solution for social media zombies who want to keep up their end of the conversation...

You needed to be there to appreciate the humor associated with this somewhat morbid topic (our own mortality) contrasted with the potentially useful services these pages offer. If you have a presence on-line you would like dealt with according to your own wishes once you can no longer do so yourself, Ian and Dean have made some useful suggestions how to start..

Committees are the lifeblood of Rotary! Join one today.

Much of our Club's work is done at the committee level.
We have five (5) major committees that need volunteers for 2013-2014:

- Administration (all fellowship events)
- Communications (website, publications, marketing etc.)
- Fundraising (Coins on Silom, Golf, Duck Race etc.)
- Service Projects (evaluates and recommends all of the projects we support)
- Rotary Foundation (Matching Grants, Polio Plus, Youth projects etc.)

If you're interested in joining one of these Committees, please contact:
PE Michael Schulz at (msbkkth@gmail.com)
Rtn Dana Caron (dana@roadhousebarbecue.com)
Rtn Dean Outerson (douterson@gmail.com)
